which is usually associated with jets. However, the first object which I saw answered quite well to all this talk of discs which has been going around. It was definitely tumbling and was smaller than our T-6. As our movement was relative however, I won't say in which direction it was moving other than it was northerly. I might add here that on one of the news programs of the following day, a reporter announced that three workers in Griffith Park, Los Angeles, had seen a disc.

1. On the afternoon of April 7, 1949, between the hours of 1445 and 1500, Lt. Edwin B. Reeser and I, were in a National Guard T-6, working the radio range at Riverside. I was in the front seat acting as observer, and Lt. Reeser was in the rear seat under the hood making his approach down the northwest leg toward the high cone. We were at approximately 8000 feet, and just before we got to the cone of silence, I told Lt. Reeser to lose a thousand feet, as we soon would have run into a cloud layer which was hanging over the range station. In the process of carrying out my order, Lt. Reeser missed the cone so he continued out the southeast leg to make a procedure turn and to attempt once more to hit the high cone.

2. It was while we were going away from the range station on this southeast leg at no more than 7000 feet that I noticed what I at first took to be a tip tank falling at what appeared to be about 1000 feet below us. The reason for this assumption was that it appeared to be red and grey in color and was tumbling in a forward direction. In our own jet squadron at San Bernardino we have some grey and red tip tanks, and I believe my first thought was the result of this association. I watched this object for about four or five seconds, then realizing the possibility that maybe some ship had peeled apart overhead, I looked up and saw what I immediately took to be four parachutes floating about 1000 feet apart but at an undetermined altitude. I could see no shroud lines or bodies, but these objects looked just like the canopy of a chute, reflecting a pure white color, not a metallic silver. By this time, we were headed back toward the high cone and in rather close so I let Lt. Reeser hit the cone, then called him out from the hood and told him what I'd seen. He then scanned the skies and spotted the four white objects in nearly the same position previously seen and immediately told me that they were parachutes, this confirming my first reaction. We then began to climb up to them to see what they were. We started from 7000 feet and by the time we had reached 9000 feet, these objects had vanished in a more or less easterly direction. By this time, our period was nearly over so we returned to our base.

3. I would like to emphasize that all this took place directly over March Field, and that the four objects which we both saw could have been jets, but they maintained this same distance of about 1000 feet apart, and they reflected a pure white color, not the silver metallic color
