tried to explain the events to. He slept badly (suffering nightmares) and got sleeping tablets from his doctor, without explaining why. He also lost a stone in weight.

His dreams (of colourful planets and robed beings on thrones) are regarded by Stephen as post-encounter anxieties due to his inability to get anyone to listen. But more interestingly, although hardly astonishingly (!), Alan has a long history of psychic experiences... including many ghost observations. From childhood he says he always had a feeling that one day he would be abducted! Yet he remains sceptical of many UFO claims (his letter to Norman Collinson was to tell him that the Telford CEM was, in his view, a hoax) And he has tried to rationalise his own encounter by returning to the scene looking for reflections from the motorway (Stephen Banks assures there are none).

In conclusion we have an archetypal psychic contactee witness who undergoes a typically pointless CEM experience. As Stephen says, one can find possible answers that fit some of the facts (there were aircraft in the surrounding area at the time (a BAC1-11 landing at 21.32) and shift workers from local factories might have been around in work clothes). But in view of other reported details (so consistent with other CEM cases) this seems an extreme answer. However, Stephen points out this is an uneducated, unemployed man afraid for the future of his family who has not developed his full potential due to inadequate education facilities. Could he be said to be undergoing a life crisis that might have allowed ordinary stimuli to trigger a strange encounter that has given purpose to his life?

Whatever the truth, this is a classic case in the mould of so many others.
